Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

The following is a quotation of the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention.

Claims 1-50 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention. The term "powder" is indefinite because it does not describe the component in terms of what it is. "Powder" is only the form that a substance takes. It may be a face powder, gunpowder, talcum powder, a powdered drug. By stating that a powder is applied, applicant is not stating what is applied. Tugwell, US 4,037,008 col 4 lines 44 et seq, defines a plastisol as resin particles dispersed in a plasticizer. Are not the resin particles themselves a powder since they are in the form of particles? Accordingly, we may assume that whenever a plastisol composition is applied to a transfer sheet, said plastisol incorporates a powder.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-50 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Sammis, US 6,143,115 in view of Hurnik et al. US 4,623,686.

Sammis teaches formation of a transfer sheet with abrasive particles imbedded therein. (Title) The transfer material comprises a single, independent, homogeneous and transparent layer of thermoplastic material such as a plastisol which liquefies upon heating during the heat transfer process. Col 3 lines 62-65. Before the transfer material has fully congealed the abrasive particles are partially embedded therein. The transfer material is applied to the transfer sheet by passing it through a screen. Col 4 lines 1-10. The abrasive particles are also adhesive in nature when activated by heat. Said abrasive particles may be nylon, which is a polyamide, reading on the copolyamide as claimed. Additionally, since the abrasive particles have adhesive properties, said particles (powder) adhere to the surface. Col 4 lines 12-28. Since the abrasive particles may be considered a powder, this disclosure teaches applying powder to the plastisol ink layer and then heating as claimed. The patent differs from the instant claims in not claiming that the ink comprises aromatic polyisocyanates.

Hurnik et al. disclose the formation of plastisol compositions which comprise a composition comprising aromatic polysiocyanates. Hurnik's plastisols have excellent storage stability and improve the bonding of the plastisol to substrates such as plastics, foils and textile sheet products. See Hurnik col 1 lines 51-68, and the teaching of aromatic polyisocyanates at col 4 lines 52 et seq. It would have been obvious to the skilled artisan to use the plastisol composition comprising the polyisocyanate as disclosed by Hurnik et al. as the ink in patentee's process for the improved benefits as taught by Hurnik et al., that is, excellent adhesive properties and storage stability. Noting example 5 in col 19, the proportions of plastisol to polysiocyanate are more than

2 to 1; the curing temperature is at least about 100 degrees Fahrenheit in a circulating oven, equivalent to applicant's curing tunnel. Regarding the limitations of claim 19 and its dependent claims and claim 42 and its dependent claims, it is well known that more than one ink may be applied to the same transfer paper to form a multicolor image.
